

It's not so complex as you thought, you see.

Art is still so real, and pure. It's every sincerity and obscurity, excitement, hesitation, puzzle and wonder. You question so often: what is it? What is it at all? Is it so? is it as such? And you're sure sometimes: yes, it is. It should be. It must be, otherwise it's not... You deny a lot: no, that's not what I meant. That is not, at all. Did you hear answer in the end? Have you witnessed--in your own eyes? It seems so empty. While does it also mean possibility? When you ask: why? Do you ask, also: why not?

I hope you've heard that, every time you ask. I hope you do. It's real and pure as always. You find it, time after time, as always.
