

Art is not a thing.

Art does not appear, but happens.

It happens under conditions

(that does not remain the same, that we cannot fully formulate:
not in the rational, nor the irrational way)

There are possibilities.

It happens as a constant opening.

It cannot be pinned down because itself is such an opening (arguably

This opening is non-rational

it recursively grows

Through which we access ?

I don't know what we could access

What we could access is 'on the other side of the opening'

Like a future we could not anticipate But is THERE and we are constantly living in

Or what we access is within this opening?

The strife?

It expands? (not necessarily in the spatial sense

Is the ? the 道? Or part of the 道?

Or not at all.

Does ? remain a ? like we still cannot answer what does it mean to be--what's the meaning?

What about those already opened to us?

They foster the other opening that opens to ?

Or the opening is pervasive and constant, not a come-and-go event?

across time and space and people who make who wonder

Fellow travelers we join here

so differently we join

It's like the milk of the milky way? The aether? that permeates our cosmos, that shines and fades at night of the void and day of the bright

How may one live without wondering being?

How may an artist make without wondering art?