

Aren't we so lucky to have varieties of art and artists, and the experience of art, so it's not a matter for one, but everyone. So we could make whatever we want and take whatever we need, from making, from looking, from our conversation. The way to art, or the next opening is not scaffolded by one framework of knowledge or one standard of experience, nor one way of teaching (we should think that the scaffolding is not stable or restrictive. mastering one technique, one knowledge, one system, one way of thinking means owning--ingesting, digesting--they become a part of you, so is a burden shaken off, a piece of flesh grown into, as a part of you, towards another future, further possibility), but by every different artwork and artist, and art. Like the stars that make the milky way. We meet the one that speaks to us, and all the others mildly await, yet we are curious, so they too will--in one day, in a time when we need them most--speak to us. I believe, or I hope that we all are traveling among, and along that milky way.

I want to know who I am--who is the being (am I?), and what does it mean, and what it does... I want to see what it is--what is the thing (or not a thing) I call 'work' and 'art'. I want to know who you are, who's looking at me, my works--what do you think, what do you take, what do you say--who are YOU? And I hope you, too, will see yourself, my works (art?), and me. What is it, that we call--WE?

From that fissure spill out a flash of inconsistency, the unexpected the possible, the opening.

That's the best thing between us--that we're so different, yet we're in a conversation. You're so different from me, that I cannot expect what you think, what you say, what you take. I cannot conceive. Those are beyond the limit of--ME.
